

Trained Bees Protect Gate From Prankers

Dogs are an old-fashioned safeguard against Hallowe'en prankers, but here's a sure protection tried out successfully by one Edmonton citizen Monday evening.

He disguised a hive of bees and placed it near a gate he feared some youths had designs upon. The youths came, kicked the comfortable looking box, and disappeared suddenly.

Dogs wag their tails at children, but the bees wag a vicious stinger," said the citizen. "My gate was all right this morning."
